Music: Songs from the sixties, Swing, Blues

Car: Corvette Stingray 1968

No human-like hair / head fur.

Cougar markings above the eyes, no eyebrows.

No shoes.

The door of the shiny Stingray 'Vette opened and he watched a young female cougar emerge from the driver's seat. Unaware of the audience she straightened her plain black skirt, which all but covered the dark spots on her left thigh. With a flick of her dark tail tip she closed the door and turned towards him. He noticed a moss green gem nestled in the light brown of her chest fur, which exactly matched the colour of her eyes. He would have discovered the typical cougar markings above her eyes by then, if not for the distraction she offered by wearing a black waistcoat unbuttoned. So instead he followed the trace of fur down her torso undisturbed. Her almost masculine shape was diluted by the elegant movements which brought her closer to him. All along there was no sound coming from her hind paws. It looked as if they were barely touching the ground. She smiled as her soft forepaw pressed the car key into his palm and purred in a dark voice: „Take care of that car“ before she walked on to the entrance of the restaurant...
